JCE shows no editing buttons

Posted by rchapman - 2009/10/15 15:12

Good morning,

Has anyone had any issues using JCE from master? My master site can use it just fine, but when I install from master in the slave, then apply the editor, there are NO editing buttons above the article text.

I've installed the plugin from master, there is also a component which is also installed from master. Did I miss a step?

Ross, can you give me a screenshot or something like that to show me exactly the problem.

I suppose that when you say install from the master you mean that you are using the JMS tools and that you have selected the JCE extension that you want to install in a slave site.

Have you checked that you also have installed the plugin "editor - JCE 154" that is part of JCE

Here is a screenshot of the edit article page. There are no buttons along the top.

Yes, in JMS tools I've select JCE extension (in plugins specifically), and it becomes an option to change the editor to JCE, but then I get... well, the screenshot. This happens on each slave site I try to install it into from master.

Can you give a screenshot with the button above.
I have installed a JCE on a master website and I don't any the button above.
So perhaps this is another extension that add them or simply a JCE configuration parameter.

this is a screenshot from my master site with JCE installed. so I'm using JMS tools to tell my slave(s) to install from the master JCE. It works, and I can select JCE as the editor, but the result is a total lack of editing buttons shown here in the master site:

- You have to check that you have correctly enabled the editor (I suppose Yes)
- Check that you have installed the JCE 154 plugin (I think YES)

- Check that you have the JCE Group Layout defined (I suppose NO) - This is the place where you define all the button that must be displayed. So go in the JCE back-end of the slave and check the groups.

JCE plugins weren't enabled in the slave's administration. There was a big red text "Create/Restore" which hooked me up.

Thanks again! I'm all set now!
