Presale: Can I do this?

Posted by Juster - 2010/01/12 21:41

I am not a natural English reader, so after reading allot, I still have some questions.

> I can make a complete new site from the masteradmin, correct?

> When I make a new site on a standalone domain, does the installation make a bridge to that domain? As I understand, all installations will be in a folder of the master, so how does that work?

> Can I work on my slaves from my master? With work I mean the complete picture, adding text, pictures, blocks etc. Or must I login to my slave and do that.

I ask this because I am looking for a solution where I can manage all my sites from one point. Not only updates etc, but a total management.

Hope this does the trick

==========

Re: Presale: Can I do this?

Posted by edwin2win - 2010/01/12 22:53

With JMS, it uses a single instance of Joomla PHP code to manage the DB.
JMS patches Joomla to allow re-using the same PHP code to connect on the appropriate DB depending on the URL received.
This is explained in the tutorial video 0 (concept)
http://www.jms2win.com/tutorial#jms12x-0

Each slave site remain indepedent and therefore you have to use the back-end of each slave site to create menu, articles, ...
Only extension that you decide to share can be manage from any slave sites.
Only a limited number of extensions can be shared.
Review product detail.
Here it is the list of extension that are defined in JMS tools and that you can share.
http://www.jms2win.com/component/content/article/135

JMS does not allow manage the content of each slave site from a central point.
Only the installation of extension can be supervised from the master website.

==========